The law related to computer crime is changing very quickly. Modern criminals are using computers to help them commit crimes like identity theft and to make it easier to commit old crimes like theft or fraud. One issue that makes it hard to fight computer crime is that this type of offence is often more difficult to solve than traditional crimes because the criminals are invisible and their actions may be hard to prove. Another issue is that it is quite difficult to prosecute a computer criminal successfully because usually nothing is actually stolen or physically damaged. In recent years computer crime has increased as the number of people using the internet to buy things or to access their bank accounts has grown. This new type of business has attracted technocriminals who order goods without pay or break into the computer systems of businesses and remove money to their accounts, or send viruses which can seriously damage computers and the information they contain. These viruses can affect millions of people worldwide. Criminals can use the internet to plan crimes and pass on confidential information more easily than meetings or telephone conversations. Computers allow criminals access to millions of people whom they may persuade to pay for something worthless.

Besides the surgeon, the most important member of the surgical team is the anaesthetist. It is this person's job to administer the drugs that allow the patient to undergo surgery at all. Because surgery would be incredibly painful if a patient could feel what was happening, anaesthetics are the only way to make surgery possible. Local anaesthetics are used for smaller surgeries. They only numb a small area of skin so the patient doesn't feel the operation as it happens. General anaesthetics are much more serious. They paralyse the patients and render them unconscious so that a surgeon can operate much more easily, without fear of sudden movements that could cause an accident or harm the patient.

One example of this phenomenon is the Garrigues area of Spain, about one hour's drive from Barcelona . the area has a Mediterranean climate , but because it is high and not close to the sea, winter temperatures are quite low. The area was particularly well-known for its high-quality olive oil which was grown mainly for export. The population of the area was at its highest about 150 years ago. When a typical village might have 500 inhabitants whereas now some villages have as few as 100 permanent inhabitants but as farming became less and less profitable, and unemployment grew. the population began to move to the cities to find work . this trend started in 1860 and has continued to this day. There are different methods of disposing of waste like incineration and recycling. The burning of solid waste is called incineration. This process has some advantages over landfills. Incinerators take up less space and do not pollute groundwater. The heat produced by burning solid waste can be used to generate electricity. Unfortunately, incinerators also have disadvantages. For example, they release some pollution into the air. And although incinerators reduce the volume of waste by as much as 90%, some waste still remains, and this has to be disposed of somewhere. Incinerators also cost much more money to build than landfills. The process of reclaiming raw materials and reusing them is called recycling. Recycling reduces the volume of solid waste. Antibiotics are incredibly useful and they have transformed modern medicine. However, there is a danger that we use them too much. The more we use antibiotics, the more the bacteria they fight get used to them and build up a resistance. There are many reasons why this might happen. Often patients stop taking a course of antibiotics when they start to feel better but before all the bacteria have been eliminated. This means that the bacteria that survive are the strongest and most resistant. These resistant bacteria will multiply and spread and, in future, will not be eliminated by the same antibiotics. There is a real danger that these new "superbugs" could cause diseases that antibiotics are unable to fight. It is very important not to overuse antibiotics in order to prevent bacteria from becoming too resistant. Try to avoid antibiotics unless strictly necessary and, if you are taking them, make sure you take
